

Find out if you need approval

How to use PlanSA's online 'approval wizard' to determine whether your development is exempt from needing development approval.

PlanSA - a new planning system for rural South Australia

Effective 31 July 2020, a new planning system - PlanSA - applies across South Australia's outback and rural areas* that will help shape your community, both now and into the future.

PlanSA includes the new Planning and Design Code and associated ePlanning platform for South Australia, replacing hard copy council development plans and the manual processing of development applications.

If you are looking to build or renovate your home, subdivide your land, add a large shed or carport to your property, you can now submit and track your application online at plan.sa.gov.au.

You will experience a simpler online planning system with everything in one place.

The new planning system will be implemented in large regional towns and metropolitan areas later this year.*

Why do I need approval?

If you're planning a development, you may need to lodge an application for approval before you get started.

Getting the right approval ensures that development is appropriate for where it is proposed and constructed in a way that is safe and compliant with relevant standards.

What do I need approval for?

Types of development that usually need approval are:

- Building work and construction
- Changing the land use, for example from an office to a shop
- Altering land boundaries, for example subdividing land into two parts
- Installing signage for advertising

Some typical projects at home are not usually considered 'development' and are exempt from needing approval. For example, installing or replacing:

- Garden sheds
- Fences
- Water tanks
- Solar panels

If you don't need approval, you can proceed with your project without lodging an application.

Some parts of the state are protected areas and require approval for all projects. For example, areas that include a heritage place or are prone to flooding or bushfires.

How to find out if you need approval

You can check if your project needs approval by using PlanSA's online 'approval wizard' at:

plan.sa.gov.au/development_applications/before_you_lodge/find_out_if_you_need_approval

After entering the address of your property, the approval wizard calculates if approval is required for your development and what your next steps involve in order to proceed.

If approval is required, you will need to lodge a development application.
